

Adam completed his law degree at the University of Nottingham, where he served as President of the Bar Society and volunteered as a mentor to younger students.

Adam has previously volunteered with a London-based women's refuge, assisting vulnerable mothers in their efforts to regain primary care of their children from the care system. He has worked as a County Court Advocate undertaking over 500 county court hearings across a range of civil-law matters and has worked as a paralegal in commercial litigation.

He currently serves as the Chair of Trustees and Director of Leducate, a charity that promotes legal education amongst secondary-school aged students in England. Adam is a committed member of Lincoln's Inn and currently sits on the Junior Members Committee.
